Mo Hayder is in a class by herself with her handling of the strange, perverted, creepy worlds she creates. I don't like gratuitous violence be it in books, movies or TV, but even though Mo's books push the limits of violence so much, for some reason they don't offend me in that way.

Abstract. Images of dismembered women can affect crime fiction readers in a number of ways: they may shock, enrage, disgust, or titillate them. In her novel Birdman, British author Mo Hayder presents a woman whose scalp had been peeled from the skull folded over so the hair and face hung like a wet rubber mask, inside out, covering the mouth and neck, pooling on the clavicle (2000: 24).
